Nursing is a systematic, deliberate caring process with individuals, families, and communities in promoting health, reducing risk, preventing disease, managing illness, and supporting clients in all phases of life. World Health Organization (WHO) places the role of nurses as very critical in lessening people's risk to various diseases ranging from cardiovascular diseases to cancer and chronic respiratory diseases to diabetes. These diseases are economically important and account for a combined 60% of all deaths worldwide. The findings of the WHO report validate the important role of nurses not only in patient care in times of need but also in providing home based care. Nurses played a key ro....Know More
